TRIUMPH OF THE GANG.

There will be few democrats to throw up their bats this morning. The city convention held last night did just what it was expected it would do. The city hall gang controlled it, and, like the pared for it without dissension. Mr. Shanahan is a gentleman of good standing in the community. The gang appreciated the necessity for the nomination of such a man. Alone and unswayed by the evil associations of this political oligarchy he might be able to. give the city a clean administration. But he will be helpless in the hands of the cormorants who packed the caususes and controlled the convention. His election will insure the present sommancy of these hateful factionists, and the city will be misruled and its treasury plundered as they have been during the past four years. It is idle to say of Mr. Shanahan that he will rise above the machihations of the men to whom he is indebted for his nomination. He cannot disentangle himself from the meshes they have adroitly thrown about him. He is the victim of the gang and the tool of the morning organ of the party, whose owner is determined to subvert the will of the majority of the party rather than that a political rival shall triumph. The democratic nomination belonged to the Hon. Edward Dykeman, who represents the better wing of the party. The party organ, owned and controlled by his itterest political enemy, issued its the policy it has heretofore pursued. and boldly and impudently demanded that the gang's candidate should and must be nominated. The edict was pheved, because it was the edict of the gang and because the would-be boss of t threatened to bolt if his wishes were not carried out. It now of a stool pigeon for the vultures of his party, because his moral and mental worth deserves a less humiliating reward. Decent men will be compelled to forego what under other circumstances would be a pleasure and vote against him.

CLEVELAND A CERTAINTY.

We think so, judging from the present indications. The democracy's blind devotion to that amazing accident is characteristic. Democratic leaders hate the man, and yet he's the only material thing they have had to tie to for twenty-five years. He was once what none of the leaders ever was. He happened to be made president. Queerly enough, they understood the situation, too. They knew that in a fair deal Cleveland would be besten, as he was in his second run. They know that he will be beaten in his third run. Yet without a single policy or principle to unite or consolidate the public sentiment, they will set up their demi-god and his platitudes, because they have nothing else and nobody else which mean anything whatever. But if beleaders can find the pretense of a living issue to make a fight on, Cleveland will of the song.

WILL MAINTAIN OUR RIGHTS.

The Behring sea dispute has now reached that stage where England must either back down from her imperious stand or be compelled to. In every bonorable way the United States has sought to avoid difficulties and bring to a speedy settlement a dispute which she had no part in bringing the Mafian affair, we have been surabout. In 1867 our government purchased from Russia Alasks and the seal islands in Behring sea. Since then the fruits of our purchase have been made to suffer at the hands of Canadian poschers in these waters. Mayor Uhl flippantly referred to the fact that he had heard a great deal of late about the "city hall gang" in his coming election. speech last night, and thereupon humorously remarked that "Mr. Hake was the only city hall man" who had been renominated. His remarks were delivered in a vein of facetiousness, no doubt, but the connection between the gang and the office he ment oned is so close, and so significant withal, that it suggests a bit of unwritten and unpublished history that may be of vast and serious importance to the taxpayers. It will be remembered that when suspicion was excited that all was not right in the city treasurer's office the mayor ordered an investigation. That investigation was made by experts and a report was duly filed. A defalcation amounting to over $18,000 was tmearthed and the bondsmen of the trensurer paid the shortage. No attempt was made to prosecute the embezzler. Was he protected by the law-abiding people of the community, or was he shielded by the public officials, or did the city hall gang interfere to save him from prison? It is not pleasant to revive this unforhat yesterday morning, disregarding tunate robbery of the treasury, but the mayor's fippancy provokes some reply. If this defaulter had been in the enploy of a bank or other monied corporation he would not have been dealt with so leniently. Another significant transfer a fact to the stage and mainfeature of the investigation is that it extended over but two years of Perry's term. Any play writer who attempts to condence, even an episode in history, to dramatic form ventures on dangerous ground. He is confronted on every side by a ponderance of incident circonstances and facts which he must reduce and boil without weakening the thread, the wire, which holds ins story, while at the same time he must color and exaggerate with dramatic effect. Many dramatists of this day have used stirring events in recent history as their theme for plays, but in many in stances they have overweighed their efforts with explanations and descriptions, and the action, and movement lapses into sluggishness and fails to command the dramatic interest which is naturally expected. Eugene Scribe, who wrote "La Czarma," which Rhea gave us last evening, was a master of dramatic construction when he touched a historical subject. He understood how to introduce characters, how to clothes them in the bow sork and buskin without separating them from their true colors. He could tain its identity. So last night we heard the story of Catherine and Peter distinctly told, and told in a manner which not only left its impress on the intelligent mind, but it possessed also instructive value. Rhea, who must be acknowledged as an actress of strong personality, of attractive grace, found in Catherine, a role which was phable all times a regal and dignined person-It was embellished by those when the democrats spent more money courtly and refined graces of manner than ever before or since? It is possible for which Rhea is noted. There was that he did not steal a dollar, but why an sir of refinement, a seemingly natural dignity, delicately tempered by womanly emotion, which, barring the faults of being misunderstood in the impassioned utterances, commanded respect and admiration. this impersonation Rhea is individual. She is original, and, in fact, any character which she stamps with her thought and act has a peculiar and striking identity. Whe shall not for-get Rhea as Catherine. William Harris entered well into the impetuous, nervous and acting spirit of Peter the Czar. His personation was consistent, and portrayed distinct y the unrelenting and fearless ruler of the Russians. Lauren Boes as Count Saphieha enacted the part in a subdued but effective manner. Mr. Armory was unctuous and amusing as Fillerbeck, the some-what bioulous admiral of the navy. Others in the cast which contributed valuable assistance were Messrs, Dunbar and Carruto, and Misses Ahell, Graham and Jordan. "La Czarina" the best interests of the people and for will be repeated at the matinee today. General Mention. Next Monday night's cake walk at Hartman's hall gives promise of a rare and enjoyable time, and members of the colored aristocracy can be noticed on the street waiking a little straighter in prospect of entering the contest. In the hotel dining rooms the same fever prevails, and what if the waiter does allow the gravy to gently trickle down your spinal column, or accidentally epill a bowl of soup on the trousers that have been so carefully creased they cannot be told from original handme-downs? Just "get onto" his curves and the faultiessly regulated footstep, and tip him an extra dime for not interfering with your breath. The superfluity of rezor displays in the windows of the hardware stores and the absence of the leading colored ladies who are having their dresses cut down to the prevailing styles of ball-room attire, are sure signs that the cake walk fever is upon us. The sale of seats is now in progress at the box office on Ottawa street, beneath the music store.

Another matinee at Smith's today. The bill next week is a tempting one and assurances are given forth the very best yet given in this theater. The burlesque "Carmandida" ought to surely attract the multitude if advance notices are to be relied upon.

Seats are now on sale at Powers' for actor Joseph Haworth who opens at Sweet with the perfume of flowers, the electric lights shedding a mellow refulgence, the Ordinary of the Morton presented an inviting appearance when the doors were thrown open at 5 o'clock last evening to admit the members of the Michigan Woman's Press club and their distinguished guest, the meomperable Raea. For several days the local members of the club had been in a state of pleasant anticipation, and when the fair Rhea arrived they were seas, the naval force of the United beside themselves with eager anxiety States will be something for which to meet her at the dinner which they had prepared and were to tender her. When the party entered the room therefore, they were both surprised and overjoyed to discover that Landlord Pantind had spread for them a dainty repast in the most exquisite good taste. The tables were arranged in the form of a T, covered with the snowiest of linens and brightened by the most highly polished silver. Be-tween the covers and all over the surface of the tables had been strewn clinging, twining smilax and beautiful roses, so that feast was dscussed in a veritable boquet of floral loveliness. Notes From the Hotels.

The New Livingston managers contemplate occupying, in the near future, the commodious room now used by Kortlander & Morphy. That firm will soon erect a block, into which it will move. As soon as the room is vacated, Messrs. Irish will convert it into one of the finest hotel offices and reception rooms in the state. The ceilings will be decogated, the floor tiled and all the modern conveniences in furniture and appurtenances put in. The space now used as an office will be devoted to reading and lounging.
